Malta's Nationalist Party has been hit with a massive legal bill after it was forced to retract an announcement that it had brought the constitutional referendum for a national vote to a close. Lawyers representing Nationalist MP Silvio Schembri, who was previously the party's finance chairman, issued a notice of defamation against media outlets including the Times of Malta. The party had released a press statement Tuesday - the same day the constitutional amendments package, which extended the term of the government from 3 to 5 years, and slashed the number of MPs in parliament from 65 to 27, was tabled in Parliament - announcing the referendum would be brought to a close. But Schembri had sent the statement to the Times of Malta via his lawyers as a reference to the article published by the newspaper that said it was "victory for the opposition" after the number of amendments passed through Parliament was slammed by critics as "ridiculous." The article also mentioned accusations of falsified votes and an attempt by the NBP to influence media coverage ahead of the polls. The party, on Wednesday, cancelled the release of the press statement because, according to the party's spokesman Stefan Busuttil, the statement contained "false allegations" about the government, which he said was covered by law.

The NBP has now issued notice of defamation - which is a legal process by which an individual is able to sue another party for defamation. The party said in the release that the defendant is the Times of Malta. But the Times of Malta denied its newspaper was the author of the statement and questioned how the papers were "liable for the actions of MP Silvio Schembri and the actions of the NBP". Schembri's case has been drawn up against the media. The NBP has made it an internal party matter. This incident will be used as a benchmark in any defamation actions in the future, said lawyers for Schembri. It's an interesting precedent in Malta's defamation law, noted David Hallup, an attorney and head of Anton Vassallo Lawyers. The statement by the NBP is that the statement contained defamation, not that it was false. Attorney-General Tonio Ben Vassallo, when contacted by Times of Malta, said the law is clear. He explained: "If statements are taken as true and concerned matters of public interest, such statements cannot be defamatory

What's New In?

Hydrodynamic interactions in assembly of mesoporous silica aggregates. Using a new set of discrete element simulations, we study large scale assembly and hydrodynamics of macropores, i.e., pores with a size much larger than the size of a single particle. We find that hydrodynamic interactions lead to complicated phenomena, including directional bond breakages and large fluctuations in mesoporous silica aggregates. Additionally, anisotropic particle flow driven by differences in particle shape and mesopore spatial distribution are observed in assembled aggregates./* Copyright (C) 2012 Fredrik Johansson This file is part of Arb.
